Summary

Federal mandatory minimum sentencing statutes (mandatory minimums) demand that execution or incarceration follow criminal conviction. They cover drug dealing, murdering federal officials, and using a gun to commit a federal crime. They circumscribe judicial sentencing discretion, although they impose no limitations upon prosecutorial discretion or upon the President's power to pardon. They have been criticized as unthinkingly harsh and incompatible with a rational sentencing guideline system; yet they have also been embraced as hallmarks of truth in sentencing and a certain means of incapacitating the criminally dangerous.

There are several varieties of mandatory minimums: the "not less than" statute, the flat sentence statute, the piggy-back statute, and the guideline constructed mandatory minimum. The Eighth Amendment cruel and unusual punishment clause condemns statutes that impose a mandatory minimum penalty of death or a penalty that is grossly disproportionate to the offense. Few federal mandatory minimums are imperiled under this standard and fewer still are susceptible to constitutional attack on the grounds of separation of powers, equal protection, ex post facto, or double jeopardy.

Introduction

Federal mandatory minimum sentencing statutes (mandatory minimums) demand that execution or incarceration follow criminal conviction. They currently cover drug dealing, murdering federal officials, and using a gun to commit a federal crime. They have been a feature of federal sentencing since the dawn of the Republic. They circumscribe judicial sentencing discretion,¹ although they impose no limitations upon prosecutorial discretion or upon the President's power to pardon.² They have been criticized as unthinkingly harsh and incompatible with a rational sentencing guideline system; yet they have also been embraced as hallmarks of truth in sentence and a certain means of incapacitating the criminally dangerous. This is an inventory of federal mandatory minimums, accompanied by a brief description of their varieties, history, and relationship to sentencing guidelines, as well as a discussion of some of the constitutional challenges they have faced.³ The introductory commentary appears, without footnotes, inventory or appendices as a separate report, Federal Mandatory Minimum Sentencing Statutes: Introductory Comments to a List with Captions, CRS REP. (1999); Federal Mandatory Minimum Statutes: An Overview of Legislation in the 106th Congress, CRS REP. RS is an overview of several related legislative initiatives.

¹ Commentators have defined mandatory minimums in a number of ways, see e.g., Determinate Sentencing and Judicial Participation in Democratic Punishment, 108 HARVARD LAW REVIEW 947 (1995) ("mandatory minimums require judges to impose a specified minimum prison term if an offense meets certain statutory criteria"); Lowenthal, Mandatory Sentencing Laws: Undermining the Effectiveness of Determinate Sentencing Reform, 81 CALIFORNIA LAW REVIEW 61, 64 (1993) ("mandatory sentencing statutes generally provide that when a specified circumstance exists in connection with the commission of a crime (1) the court must sentence the defendant to prison and (2) the duration of the defendant's incarceration will be substantially longer than it would have been in the absence of the circumstance"); Bernstein, Discretion Redux—Mandatory Minimums, Federal Judges, and the 'Safety Valve' Provision of the 1994 Crime Act, 20 UNIVERSITY OF DAYTON LAW REVIEW 765, 768 (1995)(ellipse in the original)("[m]andatory minimums, which are most commonly applied in drug cases, are statutory provisions calling for a sentence of 'no less than . . . ' for a given offense (adjusted for criminal record)"). The definition used here—i.e., any statute that effectively requires a federal judge, at a minimum, to sentence a convicted defendant to a term of imprisonment is a mandatory minimum—is designed to avoid exclusion of any provisions that should arguably be listed.

² E.g., 18 U.S.C. 3553(e) ("Upon motion of the Government, the court shall have the authority to impose a sentence below a level established by statute as minimum sentence so as to reflect a defendant's substantial assistance in the investigation or prosecution of another person who has committed an offense. . .")(emphasis added).

Types of Mandatory Minimums

Mandatory minimum statutes come in many stripes, including some whose status might be disputed. The most widely recognized are those that demand that offenders be sentenced to imprisonment for “not less than” a designated term of imprisonment.⁴ Some are triggered by the nature of the offense,⁵ others by the criminal record of the offender.⁶ A few members of this “not less than” category are less “mandatory” than others, because Congress has provided a partial escape hatch or safety valve. For example, several of the drug-related mandatory minimums are subject to a “safety valve” that may render their minimum penalties less than mandatory for small time, first time offenders.⁷ 18 U.S.C. 3553(e) authorizes the federal courts “to impose a sentence below a level established by statute as [a] minimum sentence,” but only upon the motion of the Government. The “safety value” in 18 U.S.C. 3553(f) supplies a similar, limited escape from the dictates of selected mandatory minimum statutes in favor of sentencing under the sentencing guidelines. The safety value is available without prosecutorial approval, United States v. Espinosa, 172 F.3d 795 (11th Cir. 1999), but some may consider the benefit simply a move from an explicit mandatory minimum to a lower mandatory minimum dictated by operation of the sentencing guidelines. A handful of the other “not-less-than” statutes permit the court to sentence an offender to a fine rather than to a mandatory term of imprisonment.⁸

⁴ E.g., 18 U.S.C. 924(c)(1)(A) (“... any person who, during and in relation to any crime of violence or drug trafficking crime ... for which the person may be prosecuted in a court of the United States uses or carries a firearm ... shall in addition to the punishment provided for such crime ... (i) be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of not less than 5 years ...”).

⁶ E.g., 18 U.S.C. 2252(b)(1) (“Whoever violates ... paragraphs (1), (2), or (3) of subsection (a) [relating to commercial activities with respect child pornography] shall be ... imprisoned not more than 15 years, but if such person has a prior conviction under this chapter ... such person shall be ... imprisoned not less than 5 years nor more than 30 years”).

“(1) the defendant does not have more than 1 criminal history point, as determined under the sentencing guidelines;

“(2) the defendant did not use violence or credible threats of violence or possess a firearm or other dangerous weapon (or induce another participant to do so) in connection with the offense;

“(3) the offense did not result in death or serious bodily injury to any person;

“(4) the defendant was not an organizer, leader, manager, or supervisor of others in the offense, as determined under the sentencing guidelines and was not engaged in a continuing criminal enterprise, as defined in section 408 of the Controlled Substances Act; and

“(5) not later than the time of the sentencing hearing, the defendant has truthfully provided to the Government all information and evidence the defendant has concerning the offense or offenses that were part of the same course of conduct or of a common scheme or plan, but the fact that the defendant has no relevant or useful other information to provide or that the Government is already aware of the information shall not preclude a determination by the court that the defendant has complied with this requirement,” 18 U.S.C. 3553(f).

A second generally recognized category of mandatory minimums consists of the flat or single sentence statutes, the vast majority of which call for life imprisonment.⁹ Closely related are the capital punishment statutes that require imposition of either the death penalty or imprisonment for life.¹⁰

The “piggyback” statutes make up a third class. The piggyback statutes are not themselves mandatory minimums but sentence offenders by reference to underlying statute with mandatory minimums or otherwise.¹¹

The final and least obvious group is comprised of statutes whose violation results in the imposition of a mandatory minimum term of imprisonment by operation of law, or more precisely by operation of the Sentencing Reform Act and the sentencing guidelines issued in its name.¹²

Most federal criminal laws do not mention a mandatory minimum sentence, they simply establish a maximum fine and a maximum term of imprisonment and indicate that subject to those maximum levels the court may sentence an offender to either a fine or a term of imprisonment or both.¹³ The sentencing guidelines convert many of these simple-maximum-fine\maximum-term-of-imprisonment\or-both statutes into what might reasonably be considered mandatory minimum sentencing statutes.

The federal sentencing guidelines are designed to eliminate unwarranted sentencing disparity. They establish a scorecard system that presents sentencing courts with a narrow range within

Although these might seem beyond the definition used to construct this list (statutes that require a judge to impose a sentence of imprisonment at a minimum), they are included because the United States Sentencing Commission included within its definition of mandatory minimums, United States Sentencing Commission, Special Report to the Congress: Mandatory Minimum Penalties in the Federal Criminal Justice System (Commission Report), 4-5 (1991)(“Under some statutes, a mandatory prison term is only required when the court otherwise determines to impose a sentence of imprisonment”); id. “Appendix A: Statutes Requiring Minimum Terms of Imprisonment” (listing with an * statutes that “require a minimum period of imprisonment only when the court imposes a term of imprisonment” rather than exercising its discretion to impose only a fine).

Most observers would include within this category capital crimes made punishable by death, life imprisonment, or imprisonment for any term of years, the suggestion that a sentence of imprisonment for zero years is a sentence “any term of years” being inconsistent with the intent of Congress given the seriousness of the offense to which the sentence attaches. A sentencing court therefore has no discretion but to impose a sentence of imprisonment at a minimum.

¹³ E.g., 18 U.S.C. 81 (“Whoever, within the special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States, willfully and maliciously sets fire to or burns, or attempts to set fire to or burn any building, structure or vessel, any machinery or building materials or supplies, military or naval stores, munitions of war, or any structural aids or appliances for navigation or shipping, shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than five years, or both”)(emphasis added).

which the sentence to be imposed must fall.¹⁴ The bottom of the applicable range for most crimes calls for imprisonment. Constraints on the option of probation make a sentence other than incarceration even more rare.¹⁵ A court may depart from the sentence the guidelines dictate if the case before it involves mitigating or aggravating factors overlooked in the guidelines, 18 U.S.C. 3553. Such departures are expected to occur only “highly infrequent[ly],” U.S.S.G. Introduction, ch.1 Pt.A at 7; Koon v. United States, 518 U.S. 81, 96 (1996).¹⁶

Under the current guidelines and absent grounds for departure, federal courts must impose a sentence of imprisonment following conviction for any crime carrying a maximum of fifteen years or higher.¹⁷ They will enjoy no greater discretion in most ten year felony cases¹⁸ or in many five year felony cases.¹⁹

¹⁴ Under the system, an applicable sentencing guideline has been designated for each of more frequently prosecuted federal crimes. The guideline begins by assigning a base offense level. For example, the guideline for theft offenses, U.S.S.G. §2B1.1, has a base offense level of 4. Offense level adjustments are available to accommodate the aggravating and mitigating circumstances associated with a particular case. The theft guideline, for instance, has offense level increases for the amount of money involved, the amount of planning that went into the offense, and the nature of the property taken among other things. The final offense level dictates a band of six sentence ranges; the final range is determined by the offender’s criminal history. The sentencing range for theft at the base offense level (4) for a first time offender is 0-6; that is, absent a departure a sentencing court might impose sentence of imprisonment at any term up to six months or simply impose a fine. The sentencing range for an offense level of 4 in the case of an offender with more than 4 prior felony convictions is 6-12; that is absent a departure, a sentence court must impose a sentence of incarceration set between six and twelve months.

History

Mandatory minimums have been with us from the beginning. In fact, the history of our criminal sentencing practices is the story of increased reliance upon discretion in order to mute the law's severity in individual cases,²⁰ followed by increased limitations on sentencing discretion in order to curb the resulting arbitrary and discriminatory disparities in punishment.²¹ It is a saga in which "competing theories of mandatory and discretionary sentencing have been in varying degrees of ascendancy or decline," Harmelin v. Michigan, 501 U.S. 957, 999 (Kennedy, J. concurring).

Severity and a want of discretion marked the early criminal law. The sentence which followed a felony conviction was death; except in rare instances no other punishment could be imposed. Over time the courts were given some discretion over sentencing, but the choices were hardly lenient; and corporal punishment and banishment were common.²²

¹⁹ A mail fraud conviction (18 U.S.C. 1341) of a first time offender involving more than $2,000 and more than minimal planning calls for a sentence of at least 4 months and at least 10 months if offense involved "sophisticated means," U.S.S.G. §2F1.1, ch.5A (sentencing table). First time offenders under both perjury (18 U.S.C. 1621) and obstruction of administrative or Congressional proceedings (18 U.S.C. 1505) are subject to a term of imprisonment of at least 10 months, U.S.S.G. §§2J1.1, 2, 2J1.3, ch.5A (sentencing table).

²² Blackstone's summary on the eve of the Revolutionary War marks the evolution of English sentencing law to that point: ". . . [T]he court must pronounce that judgment, which the law hath annexed to the crime Of these some are capital, which extend to the life of the offender, and consist generally in being hanged by the neck till dead; though in very atrocious crimes other circumstances of terror, pain, or disgrace are superadded: as, in treasons of all kinds, being drawn or dragged to the place of execution; in high treason affecting the king's person or government, embowelling alive, beheading, and quartering; and in murder, a public dissection. And, in case of any treason committed by a female, the judgment is to be burned alive. But the humanity of the English nation has authorized, by a tacit consent, an almost general mitigation of such part of these judgments as savour of torture or cruelty: a sledge or hurdle being usually allowed to such traitors as are condemned to be drawn; and there being very few instances (and those accidental or by negligence) of any person's being embowelled or burned, till previously deprived of sensation by strangling. Some punishments consist in exile or banishment, by abjuration of the realm, or transportation to the American colonies; others in loss of liberty, by perpetual or temporary imprisonment. Some extent to confiscation, by forfeiture of lands, or movables, or both, or of the profits of lands for life: others induce a disability, of holding offices or employments, being heirs, executors, and the like. Some, though rarely, occasion a mutilation or dismembering, by cutting off the hand or ears: others fix a lasting stigma on the offender by slitting the nostrils, or branding the hand or face. Some are merely pecuniary, by stated or discretionary fines: and lastly there are others, that consist principally in

Yet even early on there were efforts to ease the law's severity. Both the accused and the convicted could be pardoned at the King's will.²³ While Parliament regularly increased the number of crimes, it often replaced common law capital offenses with statutory crimes defined as misdemeanors or subject to the benefit of clergy. The result was the same in either case, a reduced number of capital offenses.²⁴ In our own country, state legislatures drastically curtailed the number of capital offenses soon after the Revolution.²⁵

When the first Congress assembled, it enacted several mandatory minimums, each of them a capital offense.²⁶ The nineteenth century, however, witnessed the appearance of a host of discretionary schemes designed to ease the harshness of criminal law in individual cases. The courts could suspend sentence and were vested with broad authority in the selection of those sentences they chose to impose.²⁷ Probation and parole were born and became prominent.²⁸

By late in the century at the federal level, the number of mandatory capital offenses had been reduced,²⁹ and while the number of mandatory minimums had increased,³⁰ most federal criminal statutes merely established a maximum penalty and left to the discretion of the courts sentences to imposed within the maximum. The 1909 federal criminal code revision eliminated most mandatory minimums;³¹ soon thereafter federal prisoners were made eligible for parole after

³¹ As the Joint Committee on Revision of the Laws explained: "The committee has also adopted a uniform method of fixing in all offenses not punishable by death the maximum punishment only, leaving the minimum to the discretion of the trial judge.

"The criminal law necessarily subjects to its corrective discipline all who violate its provisions. The weak and the vicious, the first offender and the atrocious criminal, the mere technical transgressor and the expert in crime are alike guilty of the same offense. In the one case the utmost severity of punishment can scarcely provide the protection to which society is entitled; in the other anything except as nominal punishment may effectually prevent the reclamation of the offender.

"The argument most frequently urged against leaving the minimum punishments to the discretion of the trial judge is that it affords parties convicted of crime of a heinous character an opportunity to obtain immunity because of the weakness or dishonesty of judges. It has been well said by a distinguished authority upon this subject that—service of a third of their sentences (after fifteen years in the case of prisoners with life sentences);³² and federal courts soon thereafter received the authority to suspend the imposition or execution of sentence and impose probation.³³ The 1948 federal criminal code revision took much the same tack as its predecessor: it eliminated many, but not all, of the “not-less-than” mandatory minimums and continued in place most of the “flat” sentence mandatory minimums.³⁴

By mid-twentieth century, a well respected commentator could observe that “[t]he individualization of penal dispositions, principally through the institutions of the indeterminate sentence, probation, and parole, is a development whose value few would contest.”³⁵ The contest was joined soon thereafter.³⁶

Driven by concerns that broad discretion had led to rootless sentencing, unjustifiable in its leniency in some instances and in its severity in others, legislative bodies moved to curtail discretionary sentencing on several fronts. Determinate sentencing,³⁷ sentencing guidelines³⁸ and

“This recommendation will be found to be in accordance with the humane spirit of advanced criminal jurisprudence. The early English statutes were proverbially cruel; the gravest crimes and the most trivial offenses alike invoked the penalty of death. Our own crimes act of 1790 reflected this barbarous spirit and denounced the death penalty for thirteen distinct offenses, but this spirit of vindictive retribution has entirely disappeared. We have abolished the punishment of death in all except three cases—treason, murder, and rape—and have provided that even in these cases it may be modified to imprisonment for life; and as humane judges in England availed themselves of the most technical irregularities in pleadings and proceedings as an excuse for discharging prisoners from the cruel rigors of the common law, so jurors here often refuse to convict for offenses attended with extenuating circumstances rather than submit the offender to what in their judgment is the cruel requirement of a law demanding a minimum punishment,” S.Rep.No.10, 60th Cong., 1st Sess. 14 (1908).

mandatory minimum sentences³⁹ became more prevalent. Parole and probation were abolished or greatly restricted in several jurisdictions.⁴⁰

The Sentencing Reform Act of 1984 brought this trend to the federal criminal justice system.⁴¹ It repealed the authority of the federal courts to suspend criminal sentences, formerly 18 U.S.C. 3651 (1982 ed.). It abolished federal parole, formerly 18 U.S.C. 4201 to 4218 (1982 ed.). It created a sentencing guideline system, applicable within the statutory maximum and minimum penalties established by Congress, that tightly confined the sentencing discretion of federal judges, 28 U.S.C. 991 to 998. The armed career criminal, three strikes, and several of the other prominent drug and gun related mandatory minimums followed in the ensuing years.⁴²

Mandatory Minimums and the Sentencing Guidelines

Even though the guidelines work to reduce judicial sentencing discretion and in fact might be characterized as creating a host of new members of the species of mandatory minimums, the not-less-than mandatory minimums have been criticized as incompatible with the federal sentencing guidelines. Perhaps most prominent among its critics was the Sentencing Commission itself. Its report, after sketching the arguments traditionally offered in support of mandatory minimums,⁴³ observed that:

25a-301 to 63-25a-306; Va.Code §§17.1-800 to 17.1-806; Wash.Rev. Code Ann. §§9.94A.310 to 9.94A.420; Wis.Stat. Ann. §§973.01 to 973.07 (repealed).

⁴⁰ See e.g., Alaska Stat. §§12.55.125 to 12.55.185; Cal.Pen.Code §1170; Colo.Rev.Stat. §§16-11-304, 18-1-105; Ind.Code Ann. §35-50-6-1; Minn.Stat. Ann. §244.05; N.M.Stat. Ann. §§31-18-15, 31-21-10. Note that some of the jurisdictions that have abolished parole as a discretionary means of reducing an offender's term of imprisonment authorize "reentry parole" or terms of "supervised release" under which the offender is subject to supervision after service of his or her full term of imprisonment.

⁴¹ The Sentence Reform Act is chapter II, 98 Stat. 1987, of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, 98 Stat. 1976, enacted as title II of Public Law 98-473, 98 Stat. 1837 (1984).

⁴² The mandatory minimum applicable when a firearm is used during the course of a federal crime of violence, 18 U.S.C. 924(c), originated in the same legislation as the Sentence Reform Act, Pub.L. 98-473, 98 Stat. 2138 (1984). The armed career criminal provisions, 18 U.S.C. 924(e), first surfaced in the Firearms Owners Protection Act, Pub.L. 99-308, 100 Stat. 458 (1986); the mandatory minimums for drug trafficking, 21 U.S.C. 841(b), in the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1986, Pub.L. 99-570, 100 Stat. 3207-2; the mandatory minimums for crack possession, 21 U.S.C. 844, in the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988, Pub.L. 100-690, 102 Stat. 4370; and the three strikes provisions, 18 U.S.C. 3559(c), in the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994, Pub.L. 103-322, 108 Stat. 1982.

The drug kingpin mandatory minimum, 21 U.S.C. 848, enacted as part of the original Controlled Substances Act in 1970, Pub.L. 91-513, 84 Stat. 1265 (1970), and most of the mandatory minimums cited in the appendix predate their more well known fellows.

The safety valve feature of 18 U.S.C. 3553(f) available to nonviolent, first-time drug offenders and passed in 1994, Pub.L. 103-322, 108 Stat. 1985, might be seen as a break in the trend towards greater use of mandatory minimums even though it does not enhance federal judicial sentencing discretion.

- “disparate application of mandatory minimum sentences . . . appears to be related to race;”⁴⁷
- mandatory minimums lack the capacity to consider the range of aggravating and mitigating circumstances that may attend the same offense and as a consequence produce unwarranted sentencing uniformity;⁴⁸

⁴⁶ Commission Report at iii (“Since the charging and plea negotiation processes are neither open to public review nor generally reviewable by the courts, the honesty and truth in sentencing intended by the guidelines system is compromised”). “There are two basic responses to this critique. First, prosecutors undoubtedly do, through charging decisions and plea bargains, sometimes seek, or agree to, lower than the maximum possible sentences. They have always done that. With respect to charging decisions, the Guidelines themselves do not even attempt to limit the historical practice. Indeed, it is difficult to imagine a system which could eliminate prosecutorial charging discretion. Nonetheless, the Justice Department recognized at the outset . . . that unrestrained pre-indictment bargaining over charges would undermine the Guidelines Therefore, it issued internal directives that prosecutors are to charge the most serious readily provable offense consistent with the nature of the defendant’s conduct. . . . As for plea bargains after indictment, the primary justification of the relevant conduct guideline is to ensure that prosecutors cannot manipulate sentences by dismissing courts. As long as the judge knows all the facts, the precise charge of which a defendant is convicted is usually of little consequence except to set the statutory maximum sentence Thus, in order to really control sentences through plea bargaining, a prosecutor must be willing to hide facts from the court. . . . The truth is that most prosecutors, most of the time, play the sentencing game straight down the middle. To achieve plea bargains, they will give defendants the benefit of close class on the provability of certain facts, or on the applicability of certain enhancements to the undoubted facts of a given case. But they will not lie and they will not conceal evidence. The consequence is that prosecutors, too, have had their discretion restrained by the Guidelines,” Bowman, The Quality of Mercy Must Be Restrained, and Other Lessons in Learning to Love the Federal Sentencing Guidelines, 1996 WISCONSIN LAW REVIEW 679, 727-28.

- uneven application deprives mandatory minimums of their potential to deter;⁴⁹
- mandatory minimums breed disparity by transferring judicial discretion to the prosecution;⁵⁰
- in contrast to the calibrated approach of the guidelines, mandatory minimums create cliffs where minuscule factual differences can have enormous sentencing consequences;⁵¹
- the amendment process of the sentencing guidelines makes them perpetually self-correcting, while mandatory minimums are single-shot efforts at crime control;⁵² and
- the most efficient and effective way for Congress to exercise its powers to direct sentencing policy is through the established process of sentencing guidelines, permitting the sophistication of the guidelines structure to work, rather than through mandatory minimums.⁵³

The Commission's report was quickly followed by a Department of Justice study that concluded that a substantial number of those sentenced under federal mandatory minimums were nonviolent, first-time, lower level drug offenders.⁵⁴ offense, dollar loss in fraud offense), weapon use, victim injury or death, the defendant's role in the offense, and whether the defendant accepted responsibility for the offense or, on the other hand, obstructed justice. Mandatory minimums, in contrast, typically look to only one (or sometimes two) measurements of offense seriousness. . . . Thus, for example, whether the defendant was a peripheral participant or the drug ring's kingpin, whether the defendant used a weapon, whether the defendant accepted responsibility or, on the other hand, obstructed justice, have no bearing on the mandatory minimum to which each defendant is exposed"). These arguments would seem to be most persuasive in the case of flat sentence mandatory minimums; in other instances the range between the mandatory minimum and the statutory maximum would seem to provide ample room for the type of distinctions just mentioned.

⁵⁰ Commission Report at iii ("Since the power to determine the charge of conviction rests exclusively with the prosecution for 85 percent of the cases that do not proceed to trial, mandatory minimums transfer sentencing power from the court to the prosecution. To the extent that prosecutorial discretion is exercised with preference to some and not to others, and to the extent that some are convicted of conduct carrying a mandatory minimum penalty while others who engage in the same or similar conduct are not so convicted, disparity is reintroduced"). This presumes that unwarranted disparity existed before the guidelines, that the guidelines have reduced or eliminated it, and that mandatory minimums returned it to the system. Three propositions upon which there is no consensus. Even if one accepts all three, the question remains whether disparity, produced by plea agreements that make possible the conviction of other wrongdoers, is unwarranted or appropriately laid to the door of mandatory minimums.

⁵² Commission Report at iv. Critics might note that the perpetual need for self-correction neither inspires great confidence nor dilutes the prospect of disparity.

⁵⁴ United States Department of Justice: An Analysis of Non-Violent Drug Offenders with Minimal Criminal Histories, reprinted in, 54 CRIMINAL LAW REPORTER 2101 (1994).

Congress responded with the safety valve provisions of 18 U.S.C. 3553(f) under which the court may disregard various drug mandatory minimums and sentence an offender within the applicable sentencing guideline range as long as the offender was a low level, nonviolent participant with no prior criminal record who has cooperated fully with the government.

Constitutional Boundaries

Defendants sentenced to mandatory minimum terms of imprisonment have challenged them on a number of constitutional grounds ranging from cruel and unusual punishment through ex post facto and double jeopardy to equal protection and due process. Each constitutional provision defines outer boundaries that a mandatory minimum must be crafted to honor; none confine legislative prerogatives in any substantial way.

Cruel and Unusual Punishment

Mandatory minimums implicate considerations under the Eighth Amendment's cruel and unusual punishments clause.⁵⁵ The clause bars mandatory capital punishment statutes, Woodson v. North Carolina, 428 U.S. 280 (1976). And although the case law is somewhat uncertain, it seems to condemn punishment that is "grossly disproportionate" to the misconduct for which it is imposed, Harmelin v. Michigan, 501 U.S. 957 (1992).

Proportionality

During the first century of its existence, there was little recourse to the Amendment's protection,⁵⁶ and the early cases involved its proscriptions against particular kinds of punishment rather than of punishments of a particular degree of severity.⁵⁷ In O'Neil v. Vermont, 144 U.S. 323 (1892), however, three dissenting justices expressed the view that the cruel and unusual punishments clause's prohibitions extended to "all punishments which by their excessive length or severity are greatly disproportionate to the offences charged."⁵⁸

The views of the O'Neil dissenters gained further credence after they were quoted in Weems, supra when the Court invalidated a territorial sentencing scheme which it found both disproportionate in degree and cruel in nature.⁵⁹

⁵⁶ In Pervear v. Massachusetts, 72 U.S. (5 Wall.) 475 (1866), the Court held that the clause applied to the federal government and not the states; the first substantive cruel and unusual punishment case apparently did not arrive before the Supreme Court until Wilkerson v. Utah, 99 U.S. 130 (1878), Mulligan, Cruel and Unusual Punishment: The Proportionality Rule, 47 FORDHAM LAW REVIEW 639, 642 (1979).

⁵⁷ See Wilkerson v. Utah, 99 U.S. 130 (1878) (challenging execution of the death penalty by firing squad); In re Kemmler, 136 U.S. 436 (1889) (challenging execution of the death penalty by electrocution).

⁵⁸ 144 U.S. at 339-40 (Field, J.)(dissenting); see also, 144 U.S. at 371 (Harlan with Brewer, JJ.)(dissenting) ("The judgment before us by which the defendant is confined at hard labor. . . for the term of. . . fifty-four years. . . inflicts punishment, which, in view of the character of the offences committed must be deemed cruel and unusual"). O'Neil, a mail order liquor dealer licensed in New York, was convicted for filling mail orders sent to Vermont where he had no license. The majority opinion disposed of the case on jurisdictional grounds and did not reach the Eighth Amendment question.

Perhaps because of the unusual nature of the penalties involved, the proportionality doctrine suggested in Weems lay dormant for over sixty years.⁶⁰ It reappeared in the capital punishment cases following Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238 (1972).⁶¹

When the capital punishment statutes enacted in response to Furman came before the Court, one of the threshold questions was whether capital punishment was a per se violation of the cruel and unusual punishments clause. For a plurality of the Court that question could only be answered by determining whether capital punishment was of necessity “grossly out of proportion to the severity of [any] crime,” Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 173 (1976). “[W]hen a life has been taken deliberately by the offender, [the Court could not] say that the punishment is invariably disproportionate to the crime.” 428 U.S. at 187.

In Coker v. Georgia, a plurality of the Court found “that death is indeed a disproportionate penalty for the crime of raping an adult woman,” 433 U.S. 583, 597 (1977). It did so after considering the general repudiation of the death penalty in such cases by the legislatures of other jurisdictions; the infrequency with which juries in Georgia had been willing to impose the death penalty for rape of adult woman; and the comparative severity Georgia used to punish other equally or more serious crimes.

The Court employed much the same method of analysis in later capital punishment cases which raised the proportionality doctrine.⁶²

Initial efforts to carry the proportionality doctrine to noncapital cases proved unsuccessful. Shortly after Coker, a petitioner, convicted under a recidivist statute which called for an automatic life sentence upon a third felony conviction, sought to persuade the Court that the Eighth Amendment precluded such a sentence based upon a comparative analysis of the severity that after release he would forever continue under a form of civil death during which he could not vote or hold public office or receive a pension, could not hold or dispose of property, and would be subject to lifelong probation. 217 U.S. at 364.

The Court pointed out that the sentence was more severe than might be imposed for some degrees of homicide, for misprision of treason, inciting rebellion, conspiracy to destroy the government, robbery, larceny, or forgery. 217 U.S. at 380.

From the Court’s perspective the legislation establishing the sentencing scheme had “no fellow in American legislation. . . . It is cruel in its excess of imprisonment and that which accompanies and follows imprisonment. It is unusual in its character. Its punishments come under the condemnation of the bill of rights, both on account of their degree and kind.” 217 U.S. at 377.

⁶² In Enmund v. Florida, 458 U.S. 782 (1982), the Court held that the death penalty was a disproportionate punishment for a felony murder in which the defendant neither killed nor intended to kill and whose culpability was limited to participation in the predicate felony. On the other hand, defendants who were major participants in the predicate felony and who acted with at least reckless indifference to the risk to human life thereby created might be sentenced to death without breaching the proportionality doctrine, Tison v. Arizona, 481 U.S. 137 (1982). In both instances, the Court examined the practices in other jurisdictions and the seriousness of the defendant’s conduct.

of the treatment of recidivism in other jurisdictions, Rummel v. Estelle, 445 U.S. 263 (1980). The majority of the Court was not persuaded. The proportionality doctrine had only been employed in capital punishment cases and Weems, it noted. Both involved punishments, different in nature, from those in Rummel, 445 U.S. at 445 U.S. 272-74.

Moreover, the petitioner had failed to convincingly establish any objective criteria to evidence gross disproportionality. Without some objectively identifiable “bright light” marking disproportionality, the Court feared application of the proportionality doctrine would constitute subjective policy making, a task more appropriately left to the legislative bodies, 445 U.S. at 275.⁶³

Any thoughts that the proportionality doctrine might have been abandoned were dashed almost immediately by Solem v. Helm, 463 U.S. 277 (1983). Solem declared that imposition of a mandatory term of life imprisonment under a state recidivist statute constituted cruel and unusual punishment. The “objective criteria” which guided a proportionality analysis included, “(i) the gravity of the offense and the harshness of the penalty; (ii) the sentences imposed on the other criminals in the same jurisdiction; and (iii) the sentences imposed for commission of the same crime in other jurisdictions,” 463 U.S. at 292.⁶⁴

Individualized consideration

Furman found that the Eighth Amendment’s cruel and unusual punishments clause, made binding upon the states by the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, precluded imposition of the death penalty at the unguided discretion of the judge or jury.

The states initially travelled one of two paths to avoid the problems of unguided discretion identified in Furman. Some eliminated discretion; others provided guidance. The second approach passed constitutional muster, Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153 (1976); the first did not, Woodson v. North Carolina, 428 U.S. 280 (1976).

Mandatory capital punishment offended the Eighth Amendment on three grounds, Woodson declared. It was contrary to the evolving standards of decency which mark the threshold of the Amendment’s protection, 428 U.S. at 288-301. It failed to address the objections of Furman to ⁶³ See also Hutto v. Davis, 454 U.S. 370, 372-73 (1982), which summarized Rummel as follows:

Like the respondent in this case, Rummel argued that the length of his imprisonment was so “grossly disproportionate” to the crime for which he was sentenced that it violated the ban on cruel and unusual punishment of the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments. In rejecting that argument, we distinguished between punishments—such as the death penalty—which by their very nature differ from all other forms of conventionally accepted punishments, and punishments which differ from others only in duration. This distinction was based upon two factors. First, this “Court’s Eighth Amendment judgments should neither be nor appear to be merely the subjective views of individual Justices.” And second, the excessiveness of one prison term as compared to another is invariably a subjective determination, there being no clear way to make “any constitutional distinction between one term of years and a shorter or longer term of years.” Thus, we concluded that “one could argue without fear of contradiction by any decision of this Court that for crimes concededly classified and classifiable as felonies, . . . the length of the sentence actually imposed is purely a matter of legislative prerogative.” Accordingly, we held that Rummel’s life sentence did not violate the constitutional ban on cruel and unusual punishment.

imposition of the death penalty at the unguided discretion of the judge or jury, 428 U.S. at 302. And it failed to permit consideration of individual characteristics of the crime and offender:

A process that accords no significance to relevant facets of the character and record of the individual offender or the circumstances of the particular offense excludes from consideration in fixing the ultimate punishment of death the possibility of compassionate or mitigating factors stemming from the diverse frailties of humankind. It treats all persons convicted of a designated offense not as uniquely individual human beings, but as members of a faceless, undifferentiated mass to be subjected to the blind infliction of the penalty of death. . . .

Consideration of both the offender and the offense in order to arrive at a just and appropriate sentence has been viewed as a progressive and humanizing development. While the prevailing practice of individualizing sentencing determinations generally reflects simply enlightened policy rather than a constitutional imperative, we believe that in capital cases the fundamental respect for humanity underlying the Eighth Amendment, requires consideration of the character and record of the individual offender and the circumstances of the particular offense as a constitutionally indispensable part of the process of inflicting the penalty of death. 428 U.S. at 304 (citations omitted).⁶⁵

The Court regularly and consistently recognized the individual considerations requirement in subsequent capital punishment cases.⁶⁶ Although the language cited above and other dicta⁶⁷ would seem to apply with similar force in noncapital cases, the Court emphasized that the doctrine was limited to capital cases.⁶⁸

Harmelin

Harmelin, a first time offender, was convicted of possession of 672 grams of cocaine, enough for possibly as many as 65,000 individual doses. Under the laws of the State of Michigan, the conviction carried with it a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment without the possibility of parole.

Harmelin contended that the sentence violated both the individual consideration and proportionality doctrines of the Eighth Amendment. A majority of the Court rejected the individual considerations argument and a plurality refused to accept the proportionality assertion.

The Court noted that in its opinions “[t]he penalty of death differs from all other forms of criminal punishment. . . . in its total irrevocability,” inter alia, 501 U.S. at 995, quoting Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. at 306 (Stewart, J.)(concurring). In view of the differences, the majority saw

⁶⁶ See e.g., Roberts v. Louisiana, 431 U.S. 633 (1977); Lockett v. Ohio, 438 U.S. 586 (1978); Eddings v. Oklahoma, 455 U.S. 104 (1982); Skipper v. South Carolina, 477 U.S. 1 (1986); Hitchcock v. Dugger, 481 U.S. 393 (1987); Sumner v. Shuman, 483 U.S.66 (1987).

no reason “to extend this so-called individualized capital-sentencing doctrine to an individualized mandatory life in prison without parole sentencing doctrine.” 501 U.S. at 995 (citations omitted).

The proportionality question proved somewhat more difficult. Justice Scalia and Chief Justice Rehnquist simply refused to recognize an Eighth Amendment proportionality requirement, at least in noncapital cases, 501 U.S. at 994. For three other justices, Kennedy, O’Connor and Souter, a sentence which satisfies the first of the Solem tests, seriousness of the offense, need not survive or even face comparisons with sentences for other crimes in the same jurisdiction and for the same crime in other jurisdictions, 501 U.S. at 1004.

More precisely, the plurality emphasized that “the Eighth Amendment does not require strict proportionality between crime and sentence. Rather, it forbids only extreme sentences that are grossly disproportionate to the crime,” 501 U.S. at 1001.⁶⁹ In the case of Harmelin, the sentence was not grossly disproportionate because of the severity of his crime, i.e., “the pernicious effects of the drug epidemic in this country. . . demonstrate that the. . . legislature could with reason conclude that the threat posed to the individual and society by possession of this large an amount of cocaine—in terms of violence, crime, and social displacement—is momentous enough to warrant the deterrence and retribution of a life sentence without parole,” 501 U.S. at 1003.

The plurality opinion also contains several useful observations about the constitutionality of mandatory sentences per se.

It is beyond question that the legislature ‘has the power to define criminal punishments without giving the courts any sentencing discretion,’ Chapman v. United States, [500 U.S. 453, 467 (1991)]. Since the beginning of the Republic, Congress and the States have enacted mandatory sentencing schemes. To set aside petitioner’s mandatory sentence would require rejection not of the judgment of a single jurist, as in Solem, but rather the collective wisdom of the Michigan Legislature and, as a consequence, the Michigan

⁶⁹ Four principles dictate a high proportionality threshold for a plurality of the Court:

The first. . . is that the fixing of prison terms for specific crimes involves a substantive penological judgment that, as a general matter, is properly within the province of legislatures, not courts. . . . The efficacy of any sentencing system cannot be assessed absent agreement on the purposes and objectives of the penal system. And the responsibility for making these fundamental choices and implementing them lies with the legislature. . . .

The second principle is that the Eighth Amendment does not mandate adoption of any one penological theory. The principles which have guided criminal sentencing. . . have varied with the times. The federal and state criminal systems have accorded different weights at different times to the penological goals of retribution, deterrence, incapacitation, and rehabilitation. And competing theories of mandatory and discretionary sentencing have been in varying degrees of ascendancy or decline since the beginning of the Republic.

Third, marked divergences both in underlying theories of sentencing and in the length of prescribed prison terms are the inevitable, often beneficial, result of the federal structure. . . . State sentencing schemes may embody different penological assumptions, making interstate comparison of sentences a difficult and imperfect enterprise. And even assuming identical philosophies, differing attitudes and perceptions of local conditions may yield different, yet rational, conclusions regarding the appropriate length of prison terms for particular crimes. Thus, the circumstance that a State has the most severe punishment for a particular crime does not by itself render the punishment grossly disproportionate. . . . Absent a constitutionally imposed uniformity inimical to traditional notions of federalism, some State will always bear the distinction of treating particular offenders more severely than any other State.

The fourth principle. . . is that proportionality review by federal courts should be informed by objective factors to the maximum possible extent. . . . [O]ur decisions recognize that we lack clear objective standards to distinguish between sentences for different terms of years. . . . Although no penalty is per se constitutional, the relative lack of objective standards concerning terms of imprisonment has meant that outside the context of capital punishment, successful challenges to the proportionality of particular sentences are exceedingly rare. 501 U.S. at 998-1001 (citations omitted).

citizenry. We have never invalidated a penalty mandated by a legislature based only on the length of sentence, and, especially with a crime as severe as this one, we should do so only in the most extreme circumstance.

In asserting the constitutionality of this mandatory sentence, I offer no judgment on its wisdom. Mandatory sentencing schemes can be criticized for depriving judges of the power to exercise individual discretion when remorse and acknowledgment of guilt, or other extenuating facts, present what might seem a compelling case for departure from the maximum. On the other hand, broad and unreviewed discretion exercised by sentencing judges leads to the perception that no clear standards are being applied, and that the rule of law is imperiled by sentences imposed for no discernible reason other than the subjective reactions of the sentencing judge. The debate illustrates that, as noted at the outset, arguments for and against particular sentencing schemes are for legislatures to resolve. 501 U.S. at 1006-1007.

After Harmelin

Since Harmelin, the lower federal courts have regularly and uniformly rejected Eighth Amendment challenges to mandatory minimums in most of their variant forms including:

- the piggyback mandatory minimums of 18 U.S.C. 924(c);⁷⁰
- the death-resulting, death penalty or mandatory imprisonment for life, 18 U.S.C. 34;⁷¹

Separation of powers

While “it remains a basic principle of our constitutional scheme that one branch of the Government may not intrude upon the central prerogatives of another,” Loving v. United States, 517 U.S. 748, 757 (1996), the Supreme Court has observed that “Congress has the power to define criminal punishments without giving the courts any sentencing discretion, United States v. Chapman, 500 U.S. 453, 467 (1991). Thus, the lower federal courts have regularly upheld mandatory minimum statutes when challenged on separation of powers grounds,⁷⁶ and the Supreme Court has denied any separation of powers infirmity in the federal sentencing guideline system which might be thought to produce its own form of mandatory minimums, Mistretta v. United States, 488 U.S. 361 (1989).⁷⁷

Crack and Equal Protection

The equal protection objections to the mandatory minimums that attach to the sale and possession of cocaine base (crack), 21 U.S.C. 841, 844, flow from the disparate treatment afforded the two forms of cocaine. The penalties for possession with intent to distribute 50 grams of crack are the same as those for possession with intent to distribute 5000 grams of cocaine powder, 21 U.S.C. 841(b)(1)(A)(ii), (iii). The 100:1 ratio between the two continues through the federal sentencing structure with one exception. There is no mandatory minimum for simple possession of powder cocaine, but simple possession of 5 grams or more of crack is punishable by imprisonment for not less than 5 years, 21 U.S.C. 844. The sentencing difference has a racially disparate impact that invites equal protection analysis.

The Fifth Amendment due process clause embodies an equal protection component confining federal action in the manner that the Fourteenth Amendment equal protection clause confines state action, United States v. Armstrong, 517 U.S. 456, 464 (1996).⁷⁸ Statutes are subject to strict

An appellate court overturned the decision of one federal court that found application of the crack mandatory minimum to minor drug-addicted participants in a law enforcement induced transaction cruel and unusual, United States v. Walls, 841 F.Supp. 24, 31-3 (D.D.C. 1994), remanded for resentencing, 70 F.3d 1323 (D.C.Cir. 1995).

⁷⁵ United States v. Jackson, 59 F.3d 1421, 1424 (2d Cir. 1995) (“Any person who engages in a continuing criminal enterprise shall be imprisoned for life . . . if . . . such person is the . . . leader of the enterprise . . . and the violation . . . involved at least 300 times the quantity of a substance described in subsection 841(b)(1)(B)[relating to trafficking in various amounts of different controlled substances],” 21 U.S.C. 848(b)).

⁷⁷ Mistretta, sentenced under the guidelines to 18 months imprisonment for conspiracy to distribute cocaine, argued that the guidelines constituted an unconstitutional delegation of Congress’s legislative authority and that the service of judges upon the Commission constituted extrajudicial service at odds with the separation of powers doctrine. The Court rejected both arguments concluding “that in creating the Sentencing Commission . . . Congress neither delegated excessive legislative power nor upset the constitutionally mandated balance of powers among the coordinate Branches,” 488 U.S. at 412.

scrutiny under the equal protection clause . . . when they contain express racial classifications [as well as] when, though race neutral on their face, they are motivated by a racial purpose or object, Miller v. Johnson, 515 U.S. 900, 913 (1995). Although insufficient on its own, a racially adverse impact is one factor to be considered in the determination of whether a facially neutral statute is racially motivated, Arlington Heights v. Metropolitan Housing Development Corp., 429 U.S. 252, 264 (1977). A statute will survive strict scrutiny only if narrowly tailored to serve a compelling governmental interest, Miller v. Johnson, 515 U.S. at 920. A statutory classification that is not racially motivated or similarly suspect and thus not subject to strict scrutiny will pass constitutional muster if it is based on some rational justification, Heller v. Doe, 509 U.S. 312, 320 (1993).

One federal court concluded that the disparate penalties had a disparate racial impact, was subject to, and could not withstand equal protection strict scrutiny, United States v. Clary, 846 F.Supp. 768 (E.D.Mo. 1994). The decision was overturned on appeal under an analysis that rejected, as have other courts, strict scrutiny in favor a rational basis standard, United States v. Clary, 34 F.3d 709 (8th Cir. 1994).⁷⁹

Recidivism, Ex Post Facto and Double Jeopardy

Double jeopardy bans trying a defendant twice for the same offense⁸⁰ and ex post facto bars retroactive criminal statutes.⁸¹ More precisely, the double jeopardy clause “protects against successive prosecutions for the same offense after acquittal or conviction and against multiple criminal punishments for the same offense,” Monge v. California, 118 U.S. at 2250. The ex post facto clauses, on the other hand, preclude laws that “retroactively alter the definition of crimes or [retroactively] increase the punishment for criminal acts,” California Dept. of Corrections v. Morales, 514 U.S. 499, 504 (1995).

Some argue that recidivist mandatory minimums offend both the double jeopardy and ex post facto clauses. They are contrary to double jeopardy, it is said, because by using a first conviction to justify an increased penalty for a second conviction they are in effect punishing the first offense twice. They contravene ex post facto proscription when they are used to sentence a Armstrong, the defendant sought discovery in order to determine whether racial factors influenced the decision of which crack defendants should be try in federal court and which to be left to the less severe jeopardy of state law. The Court held that in order to be entitled to discovery, a defendant must show that similarly situated offenders of other races were not prosecuted. Id.

⁷⁹ Each of the federal circuits has rejected equal protection challenges to the 100:1 cocaine sentencing scheme: United States v. Singleton, 29 F.3d 733, 740-41 (1st Cir. 1994); United States v. Moore, 54 F.3d 92, 96-9 (2d Cir. 1995); United States v. Frazier, 981 F.2d 92, 95 (3d Cir. 1992); United States v. Perkins, 108 F.3d 512, 518-19 (4th Cir. 1997); United States v. McKinney, 53 F.3d 664, 678 (5th Cir. 1995); United States v. Washington, 127 F.3d 510, 516-18 (6th Cir. 1997); United States v. Jones, 54 F.3d 1234, 1293-294 (7th Cir. 1995); United States v. Carter, 91 F.3d 1196, 1198-199 (8th Cir. 1996); United States v. Jackson, 84 F.3d 1154, 1161 (9th Cir. 1996); United States v. Williams, 45 F.3d 1481, 1485-486 (10th Cir. 1995); United States v. Matthews, 168 F.3d 1234, 1250-251 (11th Cir. 1999); United States v. Johnson, 40 F.3d 436, 439-41 (D.C.Cir. 1994).

The Minnesota Supreme Court has held that a 10:3 crack/powder sentencing ratio found in state law fails to satisfy the rational basis standard of the Minnesota equal protection clause, State v. Russell, 477 N.W. 886 (Minn. 1991). See generally, Wallace, Federal Cocaine Sentencing: Legal Issues, CRS REP. 97-743 (May 4, 1999).

⁸¹ “No . . . ex post facto Law shall be passed” U.S.Const. Art.I, §9. “No State shall . . . pass any . . . ex post facto Law” U.S.Const. Art.I, §10.

defendant whose first conviction predates the recidivist statute, or so it is contended. The courts have rejected both arguments.

As the Supreme Court explained when it rejected the double jeopardy challenge to the California “three strikes” statute:

Historically, we have found double jeopardy protections inapplicable to sentencing proceedings, because the determinations at issue do not place a defendant in jeopardy for an “offense,” see e.g., Nichols v. United States, 511 U.S. 738, 747 (1994) (noting that repeat-offender laws “penaliz[e] only the last offense committed by the defendant”). Nor have sentence enhancements been construed as additional punishment for the previous offense; rather, they act to increase a sentence “because of the manner in which [the defendant] committed the crime of conviction.” An enhanced sentence imposed on a persistent offender thus “is not to be viewed as either a new jeopardy or additional penalty for the earlier crimes” but as “a stiffened penalty for the latest crime which is considered to be an aggravated offense because a repetitive one.” Monge v. California, 118 S.Ct. at 2250-251 (some citations omitted).

Courts confronted with ex post facto challenges to recidivist statutes have similarly focused upon the “latest crime” and not upon the first.⁸²

The List

The list that follows begins with the “not-less-than” mandatory minimums. Within that group, the citations to statutes that permit the courts to impose a fine rather than the designated minimum term of imprisonment are marked with a single + sign; the citations to statutes that might be disregarded by virtue of the safety valve in 18 U.S.C. 3553(f) are marked with a double ++ sign.

The remainder of the list consists of statutes that have no “not-less-than” language. First come the statutes that give the court no choice but impose a sentence of imprisonment or death. Then come the flat life imprisonment statutes, followed by piggyback statutes. The statutes defining crimes punishable by imprisonment for not more than 40, 35, 30 or 25 years are listed because Congress has declared by statute that they are beyond the reach of probation, 18 U.S.C. 3561 (i.e., only a sentence of imprisonment may be imposed). The list ends with the 20, 15, 12, 10, 8, 7, 6 and 5 maximum statutes made mandatory in the eyes of some by operation of the sentencing guidelines.
